Sally is a mixed-media artist from Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Her whimsical style of art often incorporates a combination of lettering, watercolor, and book making. Her passion lies in inspiring others to experience the joy of creativity. She does this through teaching various workshops around the province and online.

Sally believes everyone has the innate ability to create. Her teaching style is one that inspires and evokes joy through the process of creativity.

Her journey to become an artist began at Grant MacEwan University where she studied Fibre Arts and Visual Communications. Upon graduating, she landed a job as a window dresser and display specialist at the downtown Hudson's Bay store in Edmonton. It wasn't until she moved to Red Deer and had her two children that she found her true calling. A friend introduced her to the Lettering Arts Guild of Red Deer where she studied calligraphy, painting and book making.

Sally's desire to become an artist has been dramatically influenced by her father's 17 year affliction with Alzheimer's disease. She talks about this in her self-published book "The Circle Club" a journey of hope and healing.
